All the old time favorites of the race track and a number of brand-new ones were in the six-day go-as-you-please match at Madison Square Garden just after midnight last night.

At midnight expectation was on tiptoe, but never a sight of John Sullivan, who was advertised to start the race, had any one had. Managers O'Brien and Kennedy were in sore distress until Mr. Kennedy stumbled upon Jack Dempsey, and by earnest pleading got the Nonpareil to say he would start the men.

The forty-four pedestrians flocked out of their huts, Peter Napoleon Campana toting the crack first. He was clad in a red and white undershirt, which needed washing, blue velvet knee-breeches, black stockings and Oxford ties. His head shone like a billiard ball as he kicked up his ancient heels and munched his toothless jaws in a grimly sportive way.

Herty, Hughes, Littlewood and Cartwright got off first, but Hendry, Dillon, Panchoot and Guerrero forged ahead of the others, and these eight led the pack in a spirited race for the first mile, which was finished first by Dillon in five minutes.

Littlewood, Cartwright, Hughes, Panchoot and Guerrero were close behind him, in that order. At the finish of the second mile, Littlewood, Cartwright and Guerrero were a lap ahead of the others, and this continued for several miles.

At 12.30, Littlewood and Cartwright, the rival Englishmen, scored their fifth mile together, amid much cheering. Guerrero, Hughes and Dan Burns following three minutes later.

Guerrero received recognition from his friends first of all, a pretty woman clambering on the picket fence and thrusting a big bouquet of flowers into his hands. A little later another enthusiastic female admirer sent a floral horseshoe to the handsome grinner.

EARLY MORNING ARRIVALS.

But, despite these testimonials of faith in him, it soon became evident that Guerrero was not in condition to run the race, and he began to fall behind, leaving the track frequently.

At 1 o'clock Littlewood had covered 9 miles 3 laps; Cartwright was one lap behind him and Guerrero a lap behind Cartwright. J. C. Adams, an unknown, had covered 8 miles 5 laps; Hughes, H. A. and Littlewood and Dan Herty 8 miles 3 laps each.

At 2 o'clock Littlewood had gained a lap on Cartwright, scoring 17 miles 4 laps, and their nearest followers, Guerrero, Herty and Conner, were a mile behind.

Cartwright led Littlewood at 3 o'clock by three laps, scoring 25 miles 1 lap, and the others were three miles behind. Moore and Burns, the two other pedestrians who were doing the work of the two gritty Englishmen, and while they increased the distance between them and their pursuers, there was only a hair's breadth between these mutual foes until Cartwright retired for his breakfast and was gone an hour.

At 6 o'clock, when the sun came in at the windows in the roof of the Garden, it found them hammering the sawdust for dear life, with Littlewood a mile and seven-eighths ahead of Cartwright, with Moore and Hegelman, the nearest of the pursuers, nearly six miles behind.

Peter Panchoot gave up the ghost at 4.40 o'clock, and retired from the race. He began to feel the effects of the strain of last February.

Betting was not heavy, but Littlewood was the choice even against the field. At Smith placed one bet of $50 on Littlewood at $100 on the field.
